

David Banks

Vice President, Mission Operations

David is a senior executive and operations leader with more than two decades of experience driving performance, growth, and operational excellence across construction, petroleum engineering, energy services, industrial equipment, and government-supported operations. As Vice President of Mission Operations for G&E Industrial Supplies, he brings a disciplined, results-oriented approach to managing complex projects from initial engagement through execution, with a strong emphasis on accountability, profitability, and customer satisfaction. His leadership spans both CONUS and OCONUS environments, supporting mission-critical operations in high-demand and high-risk markets.

With a strong foundation in petroleum engineering principles and energy-sector operations, David has developed a deep understanding of upstream and midstream environments, asset reliability, infrastructure sustainment, and field-based operational logistics. This technical grounding enhances his ability to evaluate risk, optimize performance, and align engineering-driven execution with broader business strategy—particularly in energy and government-supported infrastructure markets.

Throughout his career, David has demonstrated a proven ability to scale organizations, build high-performing teams, and align operations with strategic business objectives. He has led regional and international operations, overseen large asset portfolios, developed and executed growth strategies, and partnered closely with executive leadership to improve margins, optimize costs, and strengthen customer value propositions. His experience includes proposal development, MSAs, market analysis, petroleum engineering services, and new business capture, as well as direct responsibility for budgets, forecasting, compliance, and performance metrics.

David's background combines operational rigor with entrepreneurial execution. In addition to his corporate leadership roles, he is a founding partner of a successful custom design and construction firm, giving him hands-on perspective in cost control, scheduling, contract administration, and client delivery. His foundation in safety leadership, regulatory compliance, engineering-informed program management, and industry certifications enables him to operate effectively at the intersection of strategy and execution. At G&E Industrial Supplies, David is focused on strengthening operational maturity, expanding market presence, and delivering reliable, high-quality solutions that support customer missions and long-term company growth.
